

Additional Primary Sources

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2018/nov/21/steve-bannons-rightwing-europe-operation-undermined-by-election-laws>

This is a Guardian interview of Steve Bannon. It is an exceptional look at Bannon's ideologies and, by extension, the ideologies of the White House. In the first station, I would show until the 1:48 minute mark. The 1:48 encapsulates populism in America as it is today, and how Bannon et. al. strategically use it gain power.

<https://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2017/08/14/what-i-saw-in-charlottesville-could-be-just-the-beginning-215487>

This article from Politico is a first-hand account of what witnesses in Charlottesville experienced as James A. Fields, Jr. drove a car into a crowd of counter-protesters during a neo-Nazi march.

<https://www.cnbc.com/2018/07/04/poland-crisis-warsaw-faces-turmoil-amid-mass-protests.html>

This is a photograph taken on July 3, 2018 outside of the Supreme Court building in Warsaw, Poland. The photograph shows thousands of people protesting legislation that could force more than one-third of the country's judges to step down. The Origins article focused a lot on the rise of populism and their supporters, but I would also show how there are thousands of people resisting the populist movement.

<http://en.kremlin.ru/events/president/news/58003>

This is a transcript from a meeting between Presidents Putin and Orbán. It comes from a Kremlin website, so some skepticism is needed, but it shows the friendly relationship between the two leaders. This is an interesting relationship, but one that is certainly troubling to the rest of Europe. Putin's autocratic ways are clearly not hindering his relationship with Orbán.